Course Description

This course surveys the music from various world cultures (including that of India, Latin America, West Africa, Indonesia and China) within the framework of ethnomusicological theory. Musical systems, instruments, performance practice, notational systems, oral traditions, political and social structures, religious belief systems, rituals and other social interactions, are integrated with anthropological and sociological theory including concepts of race, ethnicity and cultural identity, cultural imperialism, the impact of technology and mass media, post-colonialism, and globalization.

Course Rationale

This course meets the requirement of an upper level 'breadth elective' in the Social Sciences for Humber degree students. Please note that Bachelor of Music degree students are NOT eligible to take this course.

Learning Outcomes

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Identify diverse musical styles through the historical and cultural context of sound.
2. Aurally identify and differentiate the music from select parts of the world including West Africa, Latin America, Indonesia and China.
3. Identify and associate select artists or cultural groups with specific genres, ensemble-types, musical styles and geographic areas.
4. Apply analytical listening skills and vocabulary through the analysis of the above music as broken down into musical elements of pitch, rhythm, timbre and form.
5. Explain how select musical traditions have evolved from a historical perspective.
6. Describe how select musical traditions continue to develop and transform in a contemporary world defined by large-scale processes of globalization, mass mediation, and electronic communications.
7. Describe how music has meaning within a complex web of historical, social and cultural conditions.
8. Explain what differentiates the field of ethnomusicology from other musical disciplines.
9. Document their musical experiences over the course of the semester through journal entries.
10. Summarize the main points of assigned ethnomusicological readings.
11. Define and identify key anthropological and musical concepts in contemporary society such as cultural relativism, ideology, musical style, transculturation, authenticity, cultural imperialism, and postcolonialism.
